I rarely play twin stick shooters, but the roguelite aspect of this game and the awesome modular weapon system is what drew me to it. The ability to create something completely crazy and then kill hordes of aliens is something which reminds me of some old space-shooters. This weapon system also allows me (together with choosing the ship and the pilot) to play with radically different strategies and approaches so it's never dull. One time I'm a fast and sleek ship which pushes enemies away and deals AoE damage, other times I'm a tank which shoots several concentrated beams which deal high damage.

But, the local coop is where the real fun begins for me, as the joy of victory and blaming the loss on someone else is always a cool thing to do among friends :P

The updates are regular which is a great thing, and not long from its release the game is already nicely balanced.. Good game to spend your spare time with your friends.

There are only few players playing this game so it's pretty hard to find people to play with. this game is great family fun it is cute and just plain fun. it looks like a beautiful mobile game but without a f***** shop like actually so i love this point ! And i love that the goal is not to kill but to run with a really nice and cool music. The decor is amazing.

A good moment to relax and take a deep breath ^^!. Get this game.

beep boop beep *headshot*. Floating heads that sing are my aesthetic. GG.

2 years later, still a GG.

3 years later, still a GG.. got the game 90% off and it still wasn't worth the 20 cents. the game is literally a tutorial the entire 36 levels and you have to be younger than 10 to spend more than a single minute on a level. i don't understand how this got on steam, or how it took more than one human to make the game. now i have to idle the game to get the steam trading cards BECAUSE THERE IS LITERALLY NOTHING LEFT IN THE ENTIRE GAME AFTER 10 MINUTES. Short, well-written visual novel.

It's free and it makes us really wonder "who is Mike?".

Music was okay.

CGs are dark for mood, I actually paid little attention to them.

And some choices could be chained, instead of repeating same choice, which only makes sense to reach certain parts.. it's alright i guess. A nice relaxing casual simulation game. Gameplay is a mix of time management (you start from scratch with each level and have to finish them in a set time limit) with a more free-form city-building sim (you can place buildings pretty much anywhere and your workers take care of gathering resources without direct control) and exploration/adventure elements (you control the main character and have to go running all over the map completing quests). I haven't seen this particular style of gameplay outside the Adelantado Trilogy, and I really enjoy it.

There are a few annoying mechanics: since the levels are long, replaying if you miss the expert time is tedious, and buildings losing efficiency over time is an unnecessary bit of micromanagement. Often you're in another area when their efficiency falls too low, so you can't fix them, and the resource costs for efficiency restoration are so high that it doesn't seem worth it compared to just tearing down the building and putting up a new one. However, that wasn't enough to make the game unfun, and it's certainly an improvement over Adelantado 1, where you can't destroy buildings at all.
